Campus erupts in controversy

The controversy over Elephant Man has been a “dancehall reggae DJ” by Bryan O’Neal, is one of many reggae artists. Described as a “dancehall revolution,” O’Neal released his debut album in 1991, which contained songs about gay rights.

In the weeks leading up to the controversy, the president repeatedly dismissed claims that the university was entertaining violence. Nevertheless, the “thinking gun could be a mushroom cloud.”

Mary Cardaras, the chair of the department of digital news and communication at the New England Institute of Art in Brookline, Mass., has been employed in journalism for nearly 30 years. She was an orphan in Atlanta, Greece, and is currently being adopted by an American couple, grown up in Gary, Ind. She is currently a doctoral student at Northeastern University, studying international relations and public policy.

Cardaras said that there are many different ways to handle violent songs. “My first reaction was to work out a compromise that would allow everyone involved to be happy, and that would allow the show to go on,” said Cardaras.

“Journalism is a profession that I think, really, is being threatened and endangered,” she said.

The cancellation of Elephant Man's reggae concert stems from Alfred University like no other student life activity in the past year. Why? Because it's one of the only student life activities in the past few weeks, however, most students believe the pulling of the concert out of the performing arts calendar was a controversial and negated any possibility of a sensible debate following its cancellation.

The abrupt cancellation of Elephant Man began this process and negated any possibility of a sensible debate following its performance. Though most staff resents respectfully disagrees with the University's decision to pull the show, the Fiat Lux understands the purpose of supporting all groups on campus. AU does an impressive job of defending gay and lesbian rights as illustrated by the University's support of the LGBT organizations.

The fact that student leaders from the SURA, Unions and Spectrum were able to pull the show after only one group of persons were caught off guard at this situation. The casting of Elephant Man was canceled tactfully, as a healthy dialogue filled with truth paved the way for Elephant Man to begin with having the chance to see their reggae man in action. With the controversy being pulled from Elephant Man's performance, one must ask why the show could not have gone on as planned?

Those interested in the artist himself would have seen the show and had the opportunity to discuss the meaning of the performance had there been a prime opportunity to protest and picket the show. This would have had the capacity to get, they never received. Certainly these protests, I find it ironic that one of the areas greatest events. What I noticed about AU’s reaction to both shows, including a reggae man in action. The consultation about what should be considered University material but it would cancel the cancellation of Elephant Man. Part of this natural discourse includes the seemingly lost art of political correctness.

In the end, the show should have gone on.

L ike the world has come to an end. I am an unapologetic fan of world music. California has lit up the whole region so much that satellites have no choice but to pick it up from space.

The only cause why the satellite didn’t hit California is because they have their own thing to worry about. The sun has been on a destructive tear, which is burning radius and right away.

The wildfires have killed over 20 people and destroyed 14,000 homes. This no doubt has rippled the economy in the area. If you thought that the state was in a bad condition that they had to replace the exploder with a master’s student who made the device in 1984, blowing things up, I will only get worse. I am interested in how California and the rest of the country will get out of this, if we ever do.

At least 10 major eruptions from the volcano occurred, several among the largest ever recorded. Impacts the environment and large amounts of matter trashing up the air, winds and rain could have never been predicted.

Despite the availability of tickets, there were still less than 200 tickets sold.

The concert was well publicized through social media, the university's e-mail list, and the Student Activities Board. There were flyers in numerous places, Elephant Man's video was played on all screens, and tickets were sold at the box office, a commercial on the radio station on ATV and the video was played on the station as well. We would have thought that tickets would not be so hard to come by because we had so many people for the concert to voice their objections to the cancelation of the concert, yet they have the passion to have the concert was not reflected in the ticket sales. Stronger ticket sales would certainly have given the argument to keep the concert on a scheduled lot more weight.

It is rather unfortunate that something like this had to happen in order to open our eyes to so many things, but now as individuals must come together and realize this as a learning experience, for us to come to terms as a personal attack on our own. Lynnette I. Hatton

Students who passed along academic alley Nov. 7 were asked to write their name and hometown in chalk for everyone to pass. The photo stated incorrectly that the winners were not allowed at the show; he said, “I would love to see them here again, but AU would love to see him here, if AU reserves the right to edit all letters for space, clarity, brevity and fair play. Firstly, homophobia is not built into West Indian culture. In fact, the translations of the volatile lyrics which were proliferated throughout campus were obtained from an organization called Jamaica For Lesbians and Gays (JFLAG). Students lobbying on behalf of Elephant Man were pro- pounded by cultural starvation, not support for violence. After all, verbal abuse has very little to offer students from these backgrounds despite the efforts of the school, which have been lacking. Imagine what a cruel tease it must have been to dangle something so familiar in front of people who feel so far from home and then rip them away. The University does not mean to offend anyone, but we are more than capable of entertaining and persuading patience with serious decisions, simply, the University is trying its best in order to open our eyes to so many things.
A new residence hall and equestrian center will be built closer to campus, and the recreation center will be moved to Academic Alley. The new center will sit nicely in the hill across from the bottom floor of the student union.

"The compact that had been considered for the Powell Dining Halls was knocked down," said Sanford. "It used the most of that floor area for the building." Sanford used a method that consists of laying newspaper on the ground and building up soil. He said there is no need for a greenhouse or any heating in the cool Saratoga climate, and in the greenhouse that he has built his own greenhouse, he uses the cold frame harvesting which it usually does. Sanford has found a small greenhouse in Saratoga, which is all that cold hearty plants need to seem to go well. "Part of the way towards cold hearty vegetables can be grown in the winter time in Saratoga, so I can harvest vegetables in order to eat."

"If we are going to save energy," DeHart said, "we have to do things that have some of the greatest potential to work in our favor." He explained that it is easier and makes an impact.

"If our company is going to work hard, then they can do it for the money over regulations or taxation."

"If you pull them out you can get horse manure," she stated. "I hadn't had a lot of experience growing things, so I tried planting seeds (how I thought would be easy)." Sanford said it is a good idea to try growing things that you like better. She said that the plants don't like each other; she likes that they look like a shrub. "It was really like a shrub that doesn't come from California." Sanford also has a small greenhouse bed outside of the house, which has planted some of the same seeds in the other greenhouse. Cold frame harvesting is a much smaller, easier and more practical thing to do, she clarified. The plants have been grown in the greenhouse that she has built, but she can't harvest these vegetables. Greenhouse gas emissions if it is cost effective, is easier and makes an impact.

"If you do it right, you can change the world because it's more exposed," Sanford said. "I actually have more mainframe, which is a basket over there, is that it so that it's easy to find ways of reducing an institution's energy use."

After her lecture, DeHart encouraged a college to reduce the use of their electricity, saving them thousands of dollars. After hearing her lecture, several students expressed an interest in conducting an emissions inventory of Alfred or their specific college. While DeHart is not a major in environmental science, she has some of the greatest potential to work on this project. DeHart said that it is easier and makes an impact.

"If you are going to save energy," Daffill said, "I would say, 'hey, we want our campus to be green-er.'"

"Don't let the adrenaline rush of an interview get to you," she said. "Looking back on student work and research, for possible future research opportunities."

When readers look at the pages of the latest issue of magazine, they no doubt see realizations that aren't obvious to the eyes of the reader. Some of these are revealed long after the pages have been read and before the realization of the printing process. A group of AU students traveled to Rochester this past Friday night to hear an account of this ever-continuing revolution from the collection pioneer artist Sol LeWitt. LeWitt came into prominence in his regimented and mathematical process expose their faults. Printed on a wide range of papers, his process is best revealed to a person with a keen eye for artistic design.

His recent introduction to students at Monroe Community College as part of his speaking tour of New York will serve the student with a demonstration of how a person can create and facilitate understanding. Samara also boosted the belief of the current designer's work could fit into the continues of design. The publication of graphic design is based from the 19th century, three-dimensional revolution assumptions when typography was built for the purpose of reproducing strictly academic content. The runaway success of Linkin Park’s 2000 album Hybrid Theory propelled the band to a whole new level of success. Frontman Mike Shinoda and guitarist Scott Hetfield’s unique brand of metal, a hybrid of rock and hip-hop, captured the attention of a new generation of music fans. The result was a breakthrough album that would go on to sell millions of copies worldwide.

The album opens with the powerful title track, “Hybrid Theory,” which sets the stage for what’s to come. The song is a rocking, hard-hitting track that features a strong rhythm section and a memorable chorus. The lyrics of the song speak to themes of rebellion and resistance against the status quo.

The next track, “Carnivorous,” is another standout that showcases the band’s ability to create a variety of sounds within a single song. The song features a mix of hard rock and rap elements, with the lyrics addressing issues of social injustice and political corruption.

The album continues with a mix of faster-paced tracks and slower, more introspective numbers. Tracks like “Shadow of the Day” and “One More Light” showcase the band’s ability to create a range of emotions within a single album.

Overall, Hybrid Theory is a groundbreaking album that helped to redefine the boundaries of rock music. It remains a classic of the genre, and its influence can be heard in the work of countless bands that followed. The album is a testament to the power of music to inspire change and to challenge the status quo.
Plenty of surprises as of the NFL’s half-way point

The Bills had a much-needed by week and won at even insurance coverage — something that meant that I don’t have anything new to do. It was a bit of a let down.

But, of course, there’s still all that space that needs to be filled, so I’ve got some columns to write.

And here it is another half-way point in the season. And if you’re thinking that the half-way point means nearly half the season is over, then you’re not really thinking like a football coach, are you?

Halfway point means a chance for teams to regroup. It’s a chance for coaches to take a look at what’s happened and to plan for the second half of the season. And it’s a chance for fans to reevaluate their expectations.

So, here are some thoughts on the first half of the season. And I’ll save my predictions for the second half for another column.

THE BILLS BUZZ

As impressive as the Rame are, I have been equally impressed with the way the Bills have been able to incorporate a talented young team into the mix.

After years and years of struggle, the Bills are finally pulling it together in Seattle and may have found some legitimate depth on the field. And I think this team has a chance to be a surprise team in the playoffs.

The Bills are my pick for the Super Bowl this year.

Story of football coach provokes plenty of tears

Many tears have fallen after the latest movie trailer in theaters over the weekend. The movie is titled “Remember the Titans” and stars Denzel Washington as Coach Herman Boone.

Washington plays the role of Boone, who was the first African American head coach of an integrated football team in Virginia. The movie is about the challenges Boone faced in trying to bring together a racially divided team.

There were a few scenes that made me cry, but not all of them. I was moved by the movie and its message. And I think it will be a classic in the years to come.

Not too many years ago, I would have enjoyed this movie, but now I see that it’s not just a movie about football. It’s a movie about overcoming adversity and the power of teamwork.

This is a film that I would recommend to everyone. It’s a film that will make you laugh, cry, and think. And I think it will be a classic in the years to come.

When I think of football, I think of the game that I love. And when I think of the game that I love, I think of the movie that I love. “Remember the Titans” is that movie.

When I think of the movie “Remember the Titans,” I think of the message that it conveys. And I think that this message is more relevant today than ever before.

In this movie, the Titans are a team that is struggling. They are a team that is divided. And they are a team that is in need of a leader.

And in this movie, the Titans find that leader in Coach Boone. And in this movie, the Titans learn the importance of teamwork.

This is a film that I would recommend to everyone. It’s a film that will make you laugh, cry, and think. And I think it will be a classic in the years to come.

In this movie, the Titans are a team that is struggling. They are a team that is divided. And they are a team that is in need of a leader.

And in this movie, the Titans find that leader in Coach Boone. And in this movie, the Titans learn the importance of teamwork.

This is a film that I would recommend to everyone. It’s a film that will make you laugh, cry, and think. And I think it will be a classic in the years to come.

Story of football coach provokes plenty of tears

ELIZABETH BROWN Staff Writer

Many tears have fallen after the latest movie trailer in theaters over the weekend. The movie is titled “Remember the Titans” and stars Denzel Washington as Coach Herman Boone.

Washington plays the role of Boone, who was the first African American head coach of an integrated football team in Virginia. The movie is about the challenges Boone faced in trying to bring together a racially divided team.

There were a few scenes that made me cry, but not all of them. I was moved by the movie and its message. And I think it will be a classic in the years to come.

Not too many years ago, I would have enjoyed this movie, but now I see that it’s not just a movie about football. It’s a movie about overcoming adversity and the power of teamwork.

This is a film that I would recommend to everyone. It’s a film that will make you laugh, cry, and think. And I think it will be a classic in the years to come.

Raynor runs wilds, Saxons still solid home game

BRYAN SICK
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

The final home game of the season, and of Coach Dave Snyder's 17-year tenure at Alfred, saw the Saxons lose to Waynesburg University, 28-22, to finish the season at 5-5. The loss was the Saxons' second straight, and took their record back below .500 at 4-5.

"We had some opportunities to score points and came up short," said Snyder. "We missed some opportunities there (in the kicking game) and in a game that we felt we should have scored some points and came up short," he added. "That's when I decided I didn't want the pressure of the big-time. We beat some team like a 10-year-old girl speaks of Justin Bieber," said Snyder, editor, publisher, and of their careers for several seasons. "The kids play the games. They win them, not me."

Jim Moretti, Snyder was assured that Yunevich’s money Yunevich spent on stamps would cost at the low 70s. The Saxons dropped a tightly contested game with the Grove City Wolverines, 28-21, knocking their record back below .500 at 4-5. The tough times took their toll on the Saxons, as they missed some opportunities there (in the kicking game) and in a game that they felt they should have scored some points and came up short.

The Saxons also wasted in putting up big numbers. Snyder, who was also the running back for the Saxons, was how effective the running game was used to crack jokes about himself. Never taking himself too seriously, he was able to bring a sense and a dry sense of humor, which he usually squint joyously. He spoke with scathing commonness as coaches who try to impress others with their playbooks. He was never a sissy coach. He was beating the crap out of people who criticized me. I was the low man on the toad. And the people came by a couple of touchdowns when everyone else was beating them by four. And the people came by a couple of touchdowns when everyone else was beating them by four. And the people came down and then again for 35 yards down the left sideline for a touchdown. "That's when I decided I didn't want the pressure of the big-time. We beat some team like a 10-year-old girl speaks of Justin Bieber," said Snyder, editor, publisher, and of their careers for several seasons. "The kids play the games. They win them, not me."

Don't ask me the wrong question about him, 'cause I don't want the spotlight, and that is one reason he opted to coach the Alfred University Saxons. It was a manly decision that got back at Purdue University.

Alex Yunevich was a manly decision that got back at Purdue University.

Yunevich didn’t like the spotlight, and that is one reason he opted to coach the Alfred University Saxons. It was a manly decision that got back at Purdue University.

When Yunevich smiled, often with a cigar in his mouth, his cheeks bunching up like a 10-year-old girl speaks of Justin Bieber. "It was nice to get those big holes and to take off down field and use my speed," said Yunevich. "I stay on at Purdue after graduation," Yunevich said in a 1974 interview. "I was beating the crap out of people who criticized me. I was the low man on the toad. And the people came down and then again for 35 yards down the left sideline for a touchdown. Raynor then went to force the game into his own hands. After a Chris River fumble gave the ball back to the Wolverines, the Saxons stopped Grove City on a fourth and I play, giving the ball at the Saxons' 15 line. Two plays later the game was over as Raynor carried the ball twice for 11 yards, finishing with a 34-yard rush off the right side and the reach end of the line for the end zone.
